TRENTON — A worker advocacy group Tuesday called on New Jersey lawmakers to increase the state's minimum wage to $8.50 per hour, then require it to increase annually to keep pace with inflation.

The Raise the Wage Campaign, a coalition of 18 anti-poverty, worker rights, religious and government watchdog organizations, called the current $7.15 minimum wage insufficient to support full-time workers in New Jersey.

Despite the group's plea, key lawmakers said it's unlikely action would soon be taken to increase the minimum wage.

New Jersey has the nation's 13th highest minimum wage. In December, a state commission said the minimum wage should be increased to $8.25 per hour, which would be the nation's highest, and then boosted annually to keep pace with inflation, but lawmakers took no action and are gone for their summer break.

"Unfortunately, the cost of living doesn't take a vacation," said Jon Shure, president of New Jersey Policy Perspective. "Working people don't get time off from the struggle to support their families and build a future. The pressure only gets worse, especially for those closer to the bottom than the top of the economic ladder."

The commission found New Jersey's cost of living has risen 56 percent faster than the state's minimum wage and stated failure to increase the wage amounts to "an inflation-induced pay cut."

Businesses oppose increasing the minimum wage, saying it will boost prices and force employers to cut jobs.

"In the middle of a recession and with the cost of everything rising quickly, especially fuel, employers can't absorb the financial impact of raising the minimum wage," said Kevin Friedlander of New Jersey Chamber of Commerce. "It would cripple already struggling businesses, especially the smaller ones."

But Democratic Gov. Jon S. Corzine on Tuesday indicated he would back increasing the minimum wage, which last increased in the state in 2006.

"We want to make sure it is allowing our people to have at least a reasonable quality of life, and if you look at the minimum wage even at New Jersey's level after the change, it's not a living wage," Corzine said.
